Cal Lutheran's Hub101 produces parade of viable companies

By MICHAEL AUSHENKER
Staff Reporter

While celebrating the first five years of the Hub101, the founders of the business incubator looked back on a string of successful companies to come out of the program.

"We want startups to move out. We want them to grow and then outgrow the space," Gerhard Apfelthaler, dean at California Lutheran University's School of Management in Thousand Oaks, which runs Westlake Village-based Hub101, told the Business Journal.

Companies developed at Hub101 include Beyond Limits, an artificial intelligence company that works on NASA missions; Eppy Health, which provides a daily program to recover from surgery, and religious website Pray.com.

"It's more than a university program, it's more than an office space," said Michael McCrary, chief executive of Pure Spectrum, another Hub101 graduate. "This should be the epicenter for startup activity. . . . Businesses should be contributing."
